

Dear Hiring Team,

The RevOps Analyst role at Creyos resonates with me because it describes the work I've naturally gravitated toward throughout my career — being the person who connects business teams to operational functions and ensures that alignment, data accuracy, and process efficiency actually hold up at scale.

At RollWorks/AdRoll, I was the critical link between sales execution and operational infrastructure. I maintained CRM data integrity across a 700+ account territory, built automated workflows with Clay.com that bridged marketing data with sales processes, and delivered the forecasting accuracy that connected business team activity to leadership reporting. At WeFund Mortgage, I took this further by building AI-assisted workflows with OpenClaw to coordinate across five different stakeholder groups — each with their own data needs and process requirements.

Creyos being a B2B SaaS healthtech company is a strong draw. I'm intentionally targeting healthtech because the operational work matters beyond just revenue numbers, and brain health assessments are a product I can genuinely advocate for. The growth-stage company environment is where I do my best work — small enough that the RevOps function touches everything, large enough that the operational challenges are real.

I'd welcome the chance to discuss how my cross-functional alignment experience maps to what Creyos needs.

Best regards, Perry Tusler pgtusler@gmail.com | 608-332-9579