

Dear Hiring Team,

I'm drawn to the RevOps Analyst role at impact.com because it sits at the intersection of where I've been and where I'm headed. I've spent 10 years in revenue-carrying roles building the operational systems — CRM hygiene, pipeline reporting, workflow automation — that this role formalizes. Now I want to do it full-time.

At RollWorks/AdRoll, I didn't just sell — I built the operational infrastructure that made selling scalable. I automated prospecting workflows with Clay.com and AI, maintained CRM data quality across a 700+ account territory, and delivered forecasting metrics that leadership relied on for pipeline health decisions. The result was $1.205M in ARR opportunities and quota attainment in 15 of 18 months. At WeFund Mortgage, I extended that approach by building AI-assisted workflows with OpenClaw to track pipeline data across complex multi-party transactions.

impact.com being a martech/SaaS company is a strong draw — I've worked in the marketing technology ecosystem and understand how partnership and marketing platforms create revenue. The RevOps Analyst role's focus on CRM optimization, pipeline reporting, and process improvement maps directly to what I've been building from the field. The difference is that I've been doing it as a side effect of selling, and I want to make it my primary focus.

I'd welcome the chance to discuss how my operational experience translates to the RevOps function at impact.com.

Best regards, Perry Tusler pgtusler@gmail.com | 608-332-9579