

Dear Hiring Team,

Trella Health's mission to improve healthcare through analytics resonates with me — and the RevOps Analyst role maps directly to the operational work I've been building toward over the past several years.

At RollWorks/AdRoll, I owned the data quality and systems integrity that the revenue team relied on. I managed CRM hygiene across a 700+ account territory, built automated workflows with Clay.com to streamline data requests, and delivered the performance metrics and dashboards that leadership used for pipeline health decisions. The $1.205M in ARR I generated was a byproduct of operational discipline: clean data, reliable systems, and processes that worked.

The troubleshooting and data management focus of this role is where I'm strongest. At WeFund Mortgage, I built AI-assisted workflows with OpenClaw to track pipeline data across complex multi-stakeholder transactions — catching data inconsistencies, automating routine requests, and ensuring systems integrity throughout the revenue cycle. It's the same work this role describes, applied to a different domain.

Healthtech is an industry I'm drawn to because the operational stakes matter beyond revenue metrics. Trella Health's remote-first culture, unlimited PTO, and Summer Fridays signal a company that values sustainable performance — which aligns with how I do my best work.
